Eighth International Symposium on Child Custody Evaluations

SEPTEMBER 25-27, 2008

Anatomy of a Child Custody Evaluation

There are seemingly an infinite number of pieces that make up the puzzle of the child custody evaluation and there is not necessarily agreement as to what makes the most effective process. Furthermore, variations on the process—due to case characteristics, institutional constraints or financial considerations—may have significant implications for evaluators, judges, lawyers and all family members.

Participants in this Symposium will have the opportunity to examine the many components of the evaluation process, from drafting the initial order to the controversial and rapidly growing practice of consulting.

- Choose from 24 Symposium workshops
- NEW! Consultation track including coaching, reviews and ethical considerations
- Pre-conference institutes for in-depth learning
- More than 25 new presenters and new topics!

Eighth International Symposium on Child Custody Evaluations

PRE-SYMPOSIUM INSTITUTES

Separate registration required for institutes.

THURSDAY, SEPTEMBER 25, 2008

9:00am-4:30pm

1. Custody Evaluations: The Essentials

This full-day institute will address the fundamentals of conducting child custody evaluations. Participants will learn how to prepare to conduct evaluations and will be provided with an extensive review of evaluation methodology, including interviewing skills, using collateral sources, report writing and interpreting test data. This institute is ideal for those beginning an evaluation practice or those interested in brushing up on the core skills.

David Martindale, Ph.D., ABPP, Co-author, The Art and Science of Child Custody Evaluations, St. Petersburg, FL

2. Advanced Issues in Psychological Testing

The selection and use of psychological tests and measures for child custody evaluations requires an understanding of their psychometric properties and relevance. The interpretation of psychological test data in these evaluations requires specialized knowledge of a parent's unique motivations and other context-driven behaviors that may affect test results. Back by popular demand, this institute will focus on selection, administration, scoring, interpretation and integration of test data within the overall assessment process. Emphasis will be placed on choosing tests that conform to legal standards of admissibility, understanding how a parent's response style affects the confidence and certainty that can be placed in interpretations of the test data, and the use of context-specific normative data in custody evaluations.

James R. Flens, Psy.D., ABPP, Brandon, FL

"The conference challenged me to constantly push myself to be a better custody evaluator and helped provide me with the tools to do that."

Laura Kagan, Ph.D., Albany, New York

3. Domestic Violence and Custody Evaluations: Implications for Parents, Children and Custody Disputes

The prevalence of domestic violence in child custody disputes demands that evaluators possess a thorough understanding of its dynamics and impact on family members, especially children. This institute will help participants understand critical issues including: (1) the most recent thinking on domestic violence and differentiation; (2) research on the impact of domestic violence on children of separation and divorce; (3) how to incorporate domestic violence issues into a custody and access assessment; and (4) parenting plans when domestic violence exists.

Alfred Mamo, LL.B., Alfred Mamo and Associates, London, ON

Lorraine Martin, M.S.W., Clinical Coordinator of Social Work, Office of the Children's Lawyer, Toronto, ON

Mindy Mitnick, M.Ed., Licensed Psychologist, Edina, MN

4. Parenting Coordination: Innovations, Advanced Concepts, Practice and Program Development

This advanced institute will offer participants hands-on opportunities to apply PC skills and techniques to innovative processes that broaden their practice. Learn to apply a conceptual model of parallel coparenting that disengages high conflict parents to provide a foundation for this alternative dispute resolution process. A practical set of procedures for intake, assessment and case management, as well as strategies to facilitate agreements and arbitrate disputes between coparents, will also be presented. Discuss the challenges of working with the court and ethical dilemmas that test the limits of PCs. Resource materials, such as sample appointment orders and detailed parenting plans, will be provided. Bring your tough cases to share!

Deconstructing the Evaluation Process: What Exactly Are we Doing?

Mental health professionals and others have examined the lives of litigants and children in custody and access disputes through many processes, including, but not limited to, evaluation, assessment, investigation and home study. Are these procedures interchangeable or do they suggest specific differences in processes that have implications with respect to practice, qualifications and/or conclusions? What are the critical defining characteristics of an evaluation and what, if any, processes are optional? What role do the judge and lawyers play in determining the process? This session will examine the not so simple process of defining the process.

The Pieces of the Evaluation Puzzle: Do They Always Fit?

This session will examine some of the more controversial components of the evaluation process and explore whether and how they fit together. Are home studies an important piece of the puzzle? What about psychological testing? Where do joint parental interviews fit into the picture? What about processes that standardize a settlement facilitation component? Are these all essential, necessary, appropriate and ethical parts of the process? Join this panel for a lively discussion.

10:30am-12:00pm Workshops 1-6

1. Assessing Children's Perceptions of Family Relationships

A major challenge in conducting child custody evaluations is how to assess children's feelings and thoughts about their divorced parents and other family members in a reliable, valid and useful way. Previous authors have focused on improving questioning techniques. This workshop focuses on a nonverbal and verbal interactive interview instrument, which engages children aged four to twelve. The 80-item instrument systematically elicits positive and negative feelings and perceptions of (1) Closeness and security, (2) Parenting behavior, (3) "Red flag" behaviors, and (4) Co-parenting behavior, with multiple family members. The instrument allows follow-up probes. New data will be presented on reliability and validity with illustrative case studies.

Angus Strachan, Ph.D., Santa Monica, CA

Mary Elizabeth Lund, Ph.D., Santa Monica, CA

2. Mental Health Consultation in Child Custody Cases

As custody disputes become more complex, attorneys more frequently collaborate with mental health professionals to assist their clients. While considerable attention has been devoted to the role of the consultant to prepare a parent for a child custody evaluation, mental health consultation may be effectively used at various stages of the child custody process. This advanced-level workshop focuses on the effective use of mental health consultants before, during and after custody litigation. Presenters will address relevant ethical dilemmas/demands and provide practical strategies for effective interprofessional collaboration, to assist distressed parents in working toward solutions that advance the best interests of their children.

Mary Catherine Bohlen, J.D., Los Angeles, CA

Lyn R. Greenberg, Ph.D., Los Angeles, CA

Matthew Sullivan, Ph.D., Palo Alto, CA

3. Reducing Bias in Child Custody Evaluations: Issues and Controversies

Among the most serious challenges to child custody evaluators is guarding against bias. Workshop leaders will identify the ways in which various biases decrease evaluator objectivity, creating the risk of distorted analysis of our data and flawed recommendations to the court. Topics include cognitive, attitudinal and cultural biases. Also discussed will be biases stemming from countertransference that may arise from evaluators' personal reactions to clients, based upon their past or present experiences in relationships. Suggestions for reducing bias will be offered.

Daniel Pickar, Ph.D., ABPP, Santa Rosa, CA

Eighth International Symposium on Child Custody Evaluations

10. Attachment Theory and Research: An Update with Implications for Child Custody Evaluation

Empirical research into attachment theory has often failed to substantiate its tenets. Attachment status early in life has not consistently proved stable over time, nor has it well predicted behavioral outcomes later in life. There have been exceptions, notably disorganized attachment, which tends to predict a poorer outcome. New research, however, has begun to emerge that supports a view of attachment that looks beyond the parent-child dyad in evaluating outcome, and moves beyond infancy as the only reference point for prediction. Solid, often replicated studies of the outcomes of secure attachment have become available and will be described. Implications for child custody evaluation will be discussed.

Pamela S. Ludolph, Ph.D., Ann Arbor, MI

11. Social Capital and Integrated Approach to Child Custody Evaluation: Application to Relocation Cases

This workshop presents the resource availability perspective on child custody evaluations, an alternative that is compatible to the traditional best interests of the child approach. This framework can help the court visualize what life will be like for the child in the alternative custodial possibilities. Presenters will examine the theoretical basis for this approach, explore statutory and case law factors in terms of resource availability as sources of social capital, and demonstrate how to apply a social capital analysis to the issue of gatekeeping and relocation cases.

William G. Austin, Ph.D., Steamboat Springs, CO

Jonathan W. Gould, Ph.D., ABPP, Co-author, The Art and Science of Child Custody Evaluations, Charlotte, NC

12. Domestic Violence Treatment in a Collaborative Program

This workshop introduces the methods and interventions of the Family Assessment and Intervention Resources (FAIR) program and the underlying research-based rationale. FAIR is a domestic violence family intervention and prevention program. It is an unusual, perhaps unique, collaborative effort between the court and a research university. FAIR provides confidential treatment for mothers and fathers who have come to the attention of the Court because of domestic violence incidents and who are assessed to be treatable with a brief (12-week) intervention. Assessment, referral and treatment methods and the issues of treatment within a court-based system will be presented and discussed.

13. Negotiating the Boundaries: Creating a Team in the High Conflict Divorce

This workshop examines the ethical and legal obligations of professionals involved in a high conflict divorce. The presenters will provide practical tips to bridge professional gaps and create an effective team approach to high conflict divorces, while respecting the different tasks and roles assigned to multiple players. The presenters will also share their hot tips on what works when dealing with highly conflicted couples.

Barbara Wasylenki, M.S.W., Samaritan Counseling Center, Albuquerque, NM

Martha Kaser, J.D., LMSW, Samaritan Counseling Center, Albuquerque, NM

14. Testimonial and Non-Testimonial Roles in Child Custody Cases

Experienced child custody evaluators often are invited to consult on cases in a variety of roles. The role and function of the testimonial expert is often different from the role of the non-testimonial expert. This workshop will examine differences between the role of testimonial expert and non-testimonial expert when hired by one side in child custody cases.

Jonathan W. Gould, Ph.D., ABPP, Co-author, The Art and Science of Child Custody Evaluations, Charlotte, NC

Timothy Tippins, J.D., Albany, NY

Jeffrey Wittmann, Ph.D., Author, Custody Chaos, Personal Peace, Albany, NY

15. Drafting Orders for Custody Evaluations: A Multidisciplinary Approach

This workshop will address many issues related to drafting Orders for child custody evaluations, with an emphasis on how various disciplines—including the judge, lawyer, guardian ad litem and evaluator—can interface in the drafting of Orders. The participants in this workshop will gain an understanding of the elements needed in an Order to lead to the best possible evaluation. Sample Orders will be examined to illustrate the variables to be considered. Thought provoking questions will help the participant think broadly about the topic.

16. Developing and Managing a Child Custody Practice

This presentation will review the results of a national survey on developing and managing a child custody practice. A variety of areas will be covered, including the reasons survey participants chose to enter this specialty area, preparatory steps and training taken prior to offering services as evaluators, referral sources and changes in participants' practices with regard to amount of clinical work as compared with forensic work. In addition, the degree of satisfaction in conducting such evaluations and the level of stress experienced will be discussed. Finally, the prevalence of board and ethics complaints and malpractice suits will be reviewed. Implications for practice will be highlighted.

James N. Bow, Ph.D., ABPP, Hawthorn Center, Northville, MI

17. Identifying and Addressing Substance Abuse

Assessment of drug and alcohol use is a critical factor in child custody evaluations. Presenters will discuss parental substance abuse disorders, treatment options, recovery process, placement recommendation and the development of sound parenting plans. Strategies for monitoring abstinence in the context of visitation or access will also be presented.

Howard Carroll, M.Ed., Salmon, ID

Claude Schleuderer, Ph.D., Kingston, NY

18. The Role of Settlement Meetings in Custody Evaluations

A large number of high conflict cases continue to clog the court docket. Judicial orders regarding custody rarely result in satisfied parties or reduced conflict. In fact, litigation often increases the parents' polarization and escalates the hostility they exhibit towards each other. As a counterpoint, parents arriving at their own solutions tend to be more satisfied and are likely to have less difficulty following their plan. This workshop will explore how settlement meetings can help parents with high conflict reach agreement on custody issues.

19. Saving the Baby and Preserving the Father-Child Relationship in Divorce

Controversy over infant parenting plans with fathers has centered on the conflict between the infant's developmental needs and the father's need to develop an early bond with the child that will increase his long term involvement and attachment to the infant. This workshop will explore the outcomes of the Minnesota Longitudinal Study of Parents and Children, recent neurobiological research on right brain development in the infant and current studies regarding the most effective strategies to keep both parents involved in the life of a child. A model will be presented for determining how the infant's developmental needs can be balanced with the father's need to become bonded with the infant in the early years, even if the parents are not together. A program for developmentally sound parenting schedules for infants will be discussed with an emphasis on teaching parents to work together to address the infant's development in the first two years of life in order to facilitate both parent's involvement in the child's life. The impact of early development on ADHD, depression, and anxiety will also be explored.

Jane K. McNaught, Ph.D., Edina, MN

20. Ethical Considerations in Expert Reviews

Attorneys are more frequently asking for experienced custody evaluators to review and critique their colleagues' work and render additional opinions of evaluations performed by court-appointed neutral evaluators. There are few, if any, standards of practice in this area and these situations can push the limits of professional roles. From the viewpoints of two custody evaluators, a family law attorney and a family law commissioner, this session explores the inherently complex set of issues present in such situations. In the process, this panel will address legal, ethical and clinical matters in an effort to define ways in which evaluation reviews can offer input that focuses on the best interests of the child and assists the court in situations rife with conflict and disagreement.

21. Writing the Report: Putting the Pieces Together for the Family and the Court

Perhaps one of the most critical tasks in a custody evaluation is writing the report. After gathering all of the data, it's important to know how to synthesize all of the data into a coherent, concise and readable report. This workshop will address critical report writing ingredients, including the length of the report, relevant data to include in all reports, and a suggested style for writing the evaluator's analysis and conclusions. A limited discussion of the controversy regarding recommendations will be addressed.

Philip M. Stahl, Ph.D., ABPP, Queen Creek, AZ

22. Best Interests Meet 40 Developmental Assets

Based upon research into the lives of two million teenagers in North America, Search Institute developed 40 Developmental Assets needed by all adolescents to develop well. The 40 Assets are widely used in successful youth programming of schools and churches and overlap significantly with the best interests standard. This workshop explores whether, how, and how much the 40 Assets might help better provide for children involved with family courts and related agencies. Case examples will be provided.

Hon. Stephen C. Aldrich, Minneapolis, MN

Marc Mannes, Ph.D., Director of Applied Research, Search Institute, Minneapolis, MN

23. Differential Diagnosis of Parental Alienation and Related Phenomena

This workshop will compare and contrast the literature concerning parental alienation and parental alienation syndrome with the more recently developed concept of the alienated child. Problems which have been noted in alienated children will be described. The concepts of affinity, alignment and estrangement will be compared and contrasted with parental alienation, such that a differential diagnosis can be made in any particular case. The differential diagnosis may involve the presence of varying degrees of each of these phenomena. Case examples will be provided showing how treatment strategies and interventions emanate from the use of this differential diagnostic procedure.

Larry Nicholas, Ph.D., Sacramento, CA

24. Unique Ethical Dilemmas of Rural Practitioners

Ethical dilemmas are inherent within custody evaluations and these difficulties are confounded for practitioners in rural areas. This course examines legal and ethical issues as they relate to the completion of custody evaluations as practiced in rural and other settings. Course content includes Standards of Practice and Professional Ethics Codes for psychologists, mental health counselors, and social workers. Specific issues and concepts apply to work in custody evaluations and are pertinent for attorneys, courts, mental health professionals and child advocacy groups.

The Child Custody Consultant: Helpful Shepherd or a Wolf in Sheep's Clothing? Addressing Ethical and Practical Concerns

The growth of custody evaluation consulting has raised new questions and issues for evaluators, courts, litigants and the consultants themselves. Coaching clients and conducting reviews of evaluations has added layers of complexity to the process. What is the impact of consultants on the evaluation process? Are there new ethical concerns that surface when consultants are involved? How many evaluators on a single case are too many? Is this a new way to provide the court with dueling experts? This session will examine the benefits and concerns that accompany this growing practice.

Domestic Violence and Differentiation: The Impact on Parent Education Programs

There has been recognition by many professionals, researchers and members of the domestic violence advocacy community that intimate partner violence is not a one size fits all phenomenon. But accurately recognizing patterns of violence and identifying types is a complex and potentially dangerous process. What are the implications on parent education programs if all domestic violence is not the same? How can programs deliver information that is accurate and helps to ensure safe and healthy families? This session will examine differentiation of domestic violence, the work of the AFCC and National Council of Juvenile and Family Court Judges Domestic Violence and Family Courts Project, and the impact on educational programs for separating and divorcing parents.

10:30am-12:00pm Workshops 1-2

1. Parent Education as Part of a Thriving Practice

Jurisdictions vary in their requirements for co-parenting education and in how they make classes available. Some districts fund their own services, but others rely on local professionals to develop effective programs. This workshop will illustrate how a creative individual trained first in psychotherapy can build a gratifying practice by adding divorce education as one specialty service. Even when a court selects or certifies multiple providers, a diligent professional can achieve a successful practice by offering parent education as well as psychotherapy, evaluation, mediation and other services.

Shirley Thomas, Ph.D., Longmont, CO

2. From Lecture to Life

Empowerment, self-awareness, resilience, optimism and hope are not words usually associated with Divorce Education. Kids' Turn now teaches life skills that participants can take with them into their reorganized families and lives. Kids' Turn, together with consultants 6 Seconds Emotional Intelligence International Trainers, have created a curriculum that focuses on families undergoing reorganization, for a better future. From didactic to interactive teaching, they have added humor based on current educational research on how participants learn and retain information.

Elyse Jacobs, MFA, Program Director, Kids' Turn, San Francisco, CA

1:45pm-3:15pm Workshops 3-4

3. Teaching Parents to Parent: A Solution-Focused Approach

Children of divorce typically are stressed and destabilized, while their parents are also distracted and upset. The behavior of these children frequently is out of control and their parents have little energy and no idea how to deal with it. In this seminar mental health professionals are taught how to teach parents to become effective "managers" of their children's behavior while parents, themselves, learn how to become better parents.

Larry Waldman, Ph.D., ABPP, Phoenix, AZ

4. Working with Latino Parents

Most educational techniques work well with persons from all cultures. However, knowledge of the dominant themes in the culture of those we are teaching further enhances the effectiveness of our techniques. This workshop explores similarities and differences in Anglo and Latino cultures with a special focus on interpersonal styles, family orientation, conceptualization of teacher-learner relationship and gender. The central cross-cultural meanings of the concepts of authority, personalisimo, and respect will be explored as will the place of guilt and shame in the learning process.

Sam Roll, Ph.D., Author, The Invisible Border, Albuquerque, NM

3:15-3:30pm Break and Exhibitor Forum

The Symposium and Congress are separate conferences; however, in order to maximize networking opportunities, attendees will meet together for the Friday Luncheon and share access to refreshment breaks, Exhibitor Forum and AFCC Hospitality Suite. Participants are asked to attend only sessions of the conference for which they have registered.

5. Cooperative Co-parenting vs. Parallel Parenting

While cooperative co-parenting is often held up as the ideal, it may not be effective for parents in high conflict, those with personality disorders or when domestic violence has occurred. Parallel parenting is often effective for those who want to do the best job of parenting their children while minimizing communication and conflict. This workshop will examine the key distinctions between co-parenting and parallel parenting and will help participants understand how to help parents understand their conflict and utilize the post-divorce parenting strategies most suited to their family.

Philip M. Stahl, Ph.D., Author, Parenting After Divorce, Queen Creek, AZ

6. Creatively Advancing Parent Education with Federal Access & Visitation Grant Funds: The Colorado Experience

Panelists will describe the U.S. Federal Access & Visitation (AV) Grant program, as well as provide pertinent research on the effectiveness of Parent Education programs funded by the AV grant. This workshop will include representatives from Colorado who will discuss the use of AV grant funds in Colorado with a particular emphasis on introducing parent education into rural and/or underserved districts. The workshop will focus on one rural community's experience in implementing their parenting education program, including its formation; parent education volunteer training; and the development of parenting education curriculum developed with the AV grant funds.

Workshops 7-8

7. Research for Rookies

This workshop is for those who have been a little too busy, ambivalent, or avoidant to conduct research on their program. It will be a report on one divorce educator's journey into the world of empirical evidence. Participants can expect a wealth of information on past research models, outcomes measures, instrumentation, statistical designs, funding resources, discovering local academic resources and much more.

Chet Muklewicz, Ed.D., Kids First, Dunmore, PA

8. Integrating the Internet into On-site Divorce Education

This workshop will offer practical and specific steps for updating and enlarging the reach of both new and existing on-site divorce education programs with a sampling of useful internet resources. Emphasis will be placed on (a) integrating online 'homework' with in-class learning, (b) steps for setting up or improving a program's Web site for purposes of marketing and more efficient interfacing with clients, and (c) networking with other parent educators.

Closing Session

Stripped Down or Fully Loaded: Can Courts Deliver Parenting Programs that Change the Impact of Divorce on Children?

There is growing evidence from rigorous evaluation studies that some parenting programs can have long term effects to substantially improve mental health, substance use and positive adjustment outcomes for children following divorce. The question posed in this presentation is whether one such program can be tailored for delivery through the family courts. The presentation will briefly describe the New Beginnings Program and describe its effects. Then challenges in delivering the program through the courts will be discussed. Finally an approach for delivery of the program will be described, which involves a partnership between the courts, community agencies and divorcing parents themselves. Findings concerning court perspectives, parent responses and community provider responses will be presented.
